IMPROVEMENT OF ORGANIZATIONAL AND ECONOMIC RELATIONS
OF STATE AND LOCAL AUTHORITIES AS A FACTOR IN THE TERRITORIES' DEVELOPMENT

The problem of internal organization and the form of functions implementation of management of state administration bodies and executive authorities in the conditions of power decentralization and local self-government modernization is considered. It is shown that an effective organizational and economic relation between these bodies is a systemic factor of economic and social development. It is proved that reform of power decentralization aimed at developing of local self-government territories can be successful in rational construction of organizational and economic relations, a significant increase in the quality and depth of performed functions and tasks, the focus of their functional content in the direction of organization, processes implementation of decentralization and democratization of power. It is noted that in the activity of the analyzed authorities there is a powers crossing in the common goals implementation, and performed functions and tasks are not combined with close direct and feedback links. The absence of rational functional load and powers delineation at their realization is shown. It is determined a number of negative consequences that can be the result of the current state of organization the activities and relations between regional state administrations and local executive authorities. The necessity of improving the quality and transparency of organizational and economic relations with subjects of territorial economy and residents in the conditions of power decentralization is proved. Proposals on the ordering and scientific substantiation of raising and changing the existing state have been made. A number of substantiated practical measures were proposed and directions of further scientific research were determined.
